A LETTER

To THOMAS PAINE.

Concluded.

YOU address to Mr. Adams, a scripture phrase for those Clergymen who have co-operated with certain statesmen to abolish our Representative system of government: "Thou shalt not revile the gods, nor curse the rulers of thy people." But those ministers, you say, such as Doctor Emmons, curse rulers and people both, for the majority are politically the people.

I am one of those whom you are pleased so often to honor with the name of priests. And yet I perfectly coincide with you in reprobating the part which too many of them have acted during the political animosities, which for a few years, have convulsed, & at one time endangered the existence of our own government. Nor can the severity of your censure easily exceed their deserts. Some of them have doubtless been deceived.—Others impelled by native pride or aristocratic principles, or the prospect of gain or the hope of elevation, have exerted all the influence attached to their profession in behalf of a faction combined for the destruction of our excellent constitution and the establishment of a monarchy on its ruins. On your return to this country they raised against you, (what you call "the war whoop of monarchical priest craft," but) what I call the voice of federal hypocrisy. Your infidelity was the ostensible, your republican pen the real ground of their alarm. For no one deserving the name of a minister of the gospel can seriously believe, what they affect to believe, that the religion of Jesus can be materially affected by the presence or absence of Mr. Paine. In the book which bears the name (but not the evidence) of the Age of Reason, they have seen your most poisoned arrow, aimed with your utmost skill, and exerted with all your might against that religion. They have seen, in that book, little more than the objections I had almost said cavals and quibbles, which, for ages past, have often been raised by infidels, and as often vanquished by the force of reason. They have seen, in that book, nothing new among those objections, except the boldness with which they are revived and the blasphemy of the language in which they are presented. They have seen that book like its predecessors, made the talk of the day, and fallen into general contempt and universal neglect. And can those federal clergymen sincerely apprehend, from your return to America, a deadly wound to that religion which has already unimpaired, unenfeebled, unfilled sustained the learning of Porphyry, the power of Julien, the eloquence of Bollingbroke, the rallery of Voltaire, the subtlety of Hume, and the blasphemy of Paine.

Under the administration of their favourite chief, their private encomiums and their public prayers, and eulogies in his behalf were abundant, and exceeded in extravagance by nothing but the profusion and malignancy of the abuse which they bestowed on those who were constrained by the force of reason and integrity, to disapprove some of his measures. But since the fourth of March 1801, too many of them have omitted a weekly and public supplication for the first magistrate of our country. They have zealously engaged in supporting an eastern new-paper, whose avowed object is opposition to his administration and to the great majority of the people. With all their professional strength, they have swelled the voice of calumny to stain his reputation, to enfeeble his hands, to subject to universal contempt him and the government, over which the providence of God has appointed him to preside.

But, sir, the number of these ministers is comparatively small, and if it were greater, their conduct however reprehensible in itself, ought not to be viewed as a reproach to that divine religion which declares the magistrate to be the "minister of God"—which commands us to "pray for all that are in authority"—to "render honor to whom honor is due"—and to be subject to the constituted authorities "not only for wrath, but also for conscience sake." And yet I do not hesitate to say, that this conduct has done more injury to the cause of our Redeemer than the boldness and ridicule, and blasphemy which you display in mentioning his name, his gospel and the office of his ministers.

"Thou shalt not revile the God," is the first part of the verse which you quote. On this you say, "it makes no part of my scripture, I believe but one God."

I am sure you will not esteem me uncandid when I say that you wish by this to insinuate that the scriptures admit a plurality of Gods, and to contrast this folly with the wisdom of infidelity which acknowledges but one. Long, sir, did the world experience the utmost efforts of natural reason in investigating the nature and perfections of Deity. And what were the effects of those efforts? Every temple even of enlightened Rome and philosophical Greece was crowded with Gods: and the proud philosopher as well as the humble peasant, bowed in humble adoration to departed profligates and harlots, to bulls, to calves, and to reptiles. And can you imagine that, if you had been contemporary with the sages of antiquity, your profounder researches would have corrected this predominant error; you would have banished from the minds of Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, &c. their doubts respecting the nature, number and perfections of the Gods, and of the soul's immortality?—No sir. Your modesty repels with indignation, the imputation of a pretension so arrogant. In those pure ages you would probably have herded with the worshippers of He-fiod's thirty thousand gods; and, like the rational and venerable Socrates in the moment of death, the gratitude of your heart would have inclined you piously to offer a cock to Esculapius.

Whence then, let me ask, do you derive those sublime conceptions of the Deity for which you say you are complimented by the bishop of Landaff? From those very scriptures which you despise, and which you here charge with teaching the doctrine of a plurality of Gods. "Thou shalt not revile the Gods." Is it unknown to you that in all languages, many words are used not only in a literal, but also in a figurative sense? In a figurative sense the inspired writings often apply the term God, or Gods to celestial angels; to men as princes, justices, or judges; to satan who is called "the god of this world." And the learned apostle Paul speaking of some enemies of the cross of Christ, says that their "belly is their god." I do not adduce this last example to insinuate that this is the "one god" which you exclusively acknowledge.—Such a suspicion is precluded by the exemplary temperance with which you profess to "nourish your health." And if a knowledge of the bible had made a part of the "abundance" with which you tell us, you furnish your "mind," I should have been saved from the necessity of informing you that we need only open that book to see the unity of God inculcated and idolatry punished: to learn that, "I am God and there is none else—the Lord our God is one Lord" were the voice and response which pervaded the camp, the tabernacle, the temple and nation of the Jews; to read that St. Paul, in presence of the supreme court of Athens boldly maintained the unity of God against the learned philosophers of that city; and by saying "they be no gods which are made with hands," routed the persecuting power of Ephefus, a city devoted to the worship of the great goddess Diana and the image which fell down from Jupiter."

I intended to have glanced at some less important sentiments in yours to Mr. Adams. But I have already exhausted your patience, and transgressed the limits which I had prescribed to this letter. I cannot, however, conclude without expressing my regret that (although christianity has nothing to fear from your talents or industry) your hostility to it may render some pious republicans more easily deceived by those hypocritical federalists who cunningly connect the ideas of republicanism and infidelity and affirm that the object of republicans is the extirpation of the gospel. The religion of Jesus, neither in its origin nor its progress, has ever been indebted, for its glory, to the elevation or worldly greatness of its patrons. To counteract this political tendency of your enmity against it I shall nevertheless, embrace the opportunity of communicating to those pious republicans, thro' the medium of this letter to you, one of the sublimest eulogiums that ever was expressed on the reasonableness of the Christian religion. I shall give it in the very words of a republican with whose intellectual greatness your diffidence would blush to be compared—whose influence is unrivalled—and who sits this day at the head of the free, happiest and most enlightened government in the world.

"Reason and free enquiry, faith he, are the only effectual agents against error. Give a loose to them, they will support the true religion by bringing every false one to their tribunal, to the test of their investigation. They are the natural enemies of error, and of error only. Had not the Roman government permitted free enquiry, Christianity could never have been introduced. Had not free enquiry been indulged at the era of reformation, the corruptions of Christianity could not have been purged away." That is to say, the reasonableness of Christianity was so gloriously resplendent that it confounded the wisdom of heathen philosophy, and dissipated the darkness of Papal superstition.

I am, Sir, with due respect,
Your very humble servant,
JOHN GEMMIL.

LEXINGTON, APRIL 26.

A late London paper mentions that La Fayette has broken his thigh, by a fall on the ice, as he was coming out from the office of the minister of marine.

WILLIAM MURPHY Esq. post-master at Washington, sent us the following, which he received by the last mail—

To Mr. —, Printer at Pittsburgh.

By inserting the following account of a Robbery in your paper, you will oblige an amiable but unfortunate young lady, and afford her parents an opportunity of sending her relief.

Two Hundred Dollars Reward.

Last Monday night, Miss ESTHER M'DOWELL, daughter of Doctor John M'Dowell, now in Kentucky, was robbed of a large sum of money, near Pine creek, in Lycoming county, on her way from Montreal to her parents in Kentucky, by a BENJAMIN CONNETT, who had been brought up in her father's house, and was now entrusted with the life and property of his only daughter. About three years ago, the doctor moved from Montreal, leaving his daughter there with an aged aunt, who is since dead. Her father hearing of her aunt's death, sent the said Benjamin Connett to bring her home.

After travelling a great distance on Monday, and on some occasions avoiding the most public places on the main road, he pressed her to ride till late at night, always telling her, that gentle, or even tolerable lodging could not be had, where he proposed to put up. When they had come within one mile of Pine creek, the declaring that she would not pass another house, he fell behind; not wishing to ride before in the dark, she stopped; when he came up leading his horse, seized hold of her and dragged her to the ground. She cried out "Benjamin, can you do this!" He then presented a pistol to her breast, requiring her to deliver up her money or die! She begged for God's sake to spare her life, and take all the possessed. He then fixed a gag in her mouth, stripped her naked, not leaving her linen, broad dress, shoe or stockings, tied her hands behind her back, and made her fast to a tree. Having packed up all her cloaths in a portmanteau, he loosed her from that tree, and leading her some perches into a clove wood, bound her fast to another, without committing any further outrage upon her body. Here she remained in a dark night exposed to a severe frost from about 11 o'clock till daybreak, when, after many ineffectual struggles, she at length broke the cord by which she was bound to the tree, and unbound and rushed with cold, and almost bereaved of her senses, she, with the utmost exertion arrived at a house, about eighty perches distant; every thing was immediately provided that could alleviate her sufferings, and render her comfortable. As soon as she was able to speak and tell the name of the villain and describe his person, he was pursued in different directions.

The perpetrator of this inhuman crime, is about twenty-two years of age, of a middle size, swarthy complexion, has long black hair, tied with ribbon, has a remarkably large mole above his left eye brow, which he studies to conceal, by permitting his hair to hang down long on his forehead; had on a light coloured great coat, blue straight coat, swan-down waistcoat, and pantaloons of light coloured calico. Took with him both horses, the one grey and the other black—the woman's saddle was new, and had a piece of bear skin fastened to the seat; also two portmanteaus, in one of which were upwards of one thousand guineas. He had likewise a gold watch, with the owner's name, Esther M'Dowell, written in full on the inner side of the case, & the initials of her father's name, J. M. (John M'Dowell) on the outer side. Any person apprehending the villain so that he may be brought to justice, shall receive the above reward, and all expenses paid, by

ESTHER M'DOWELL.

This young lady having nothing now in her possession by which she can ascertain the place or county in Kentucky, in which her parents reside, and not being able to recollect, is obliged to request that this account of her misfortunes may be published in the Pittsburgh Gazette, and forwarded from thence to Kentucky, and there republished in the several news-papers, as the only means now in her power, of informing her parents of her misfortunes. And however the foregoing narrative may wound the feelings of her tender parents, yet the hopes their distress will be much abated, when they shall have heard that she is now able to step a little about, and will in a few days be completely recovered. She will expect to see her father as soon as possible, at the subscriber's on the West branch of the Susquehanna, near the mouth of Pine creek, Lycoming county, and state of Pennsylvania.

ISAAC GRIER.

March 23d, 1803.

P. S. The parents of this villain, live near Redstone, and perhaps he might go towards them.

The Pittsburgh Gazette of the 15th instant says, "A person answering the above description, crossed the Allegheny river at this place about ten days ago. He had two horses with him, one black the other grey."

To the free voters of the upper Congressional district, on the South side of the Kentucky river.

FELLOW CITIZENS,

THE author of this address has no interest different from your own. An earnest solicitude for the happiness and prosperity of the state, where he resides, and a sincere desire that the people may upon all occasions pursue the true means of effecting these important ends, induce him to call your attention to an object of the highest consideration.

It is presumed upon very justifiable grounds, that Col. ISAAC SHELLEY, of Lincoln, will serve as a representative in Congress, provided he is elected. The genuine friends of republican principles in this country, ought to rejoice upon the occasion; because they now have an opportunity, by placing that gentleman in the councils of the union, not only to combine in the character of their delegate, great personal merit with distinguished abilities, but to remove every illiberal aspersions, that may have been cast upon the state of Kentucky, on the ground of defective legislative talents, in her congressional representatives.

If, fellow citizens, the charge may have been true, in some instances, it is the province of wisdom, to seize upon the earliest opportunity to remove it. Let it be remembered, that it is the character which a state assumes in the world, like the character of an individual, that either accelerates its prosperity or impresses it with misfortunes. Connected with every state in the union, by political relation, there is no means so certain of communicating to every part of it, the state of society, of morals, temper, and intelligence, as through the medium of our representatives, in the general congress of the nation. If they are men of talents and virtue, the wisdom and discretion of the people whom they represent, will be appreciated accordingly. If they are otherwise, the misfortune will be reflected back to its original source, and serve as a criterion to estimate the national character.

Besides, there has no period occurred, since the settlement of this country, that more seriously called for a virtuous and enlightened representation, than the present. The shutting up the Mississippi, upon the free navigation of which the prosperity of the state depends, affords a subject, which will require every effort of talents and patriotism, to settle it upon equitable principles. Will you confide this important affair into the hands of men who, perhaps, neither understand the subject, or possess sufficient abilities to give weight to the investigation? It will rather be a proof of your wisdom to entrust it to the care of men whose principles, talents, and integrity have been proved. Who have upon all occasions expressed the interest they felt for the prosperity of the country; by a faithful discharge of their duty, in the respective departments which they may have filled, and whose situation in life precludes the idea of their acting from sinister motives.

Col. ISAAC SHELLEY is precisely a character of this description. In point of patriotism, the duties he discharged as a revolutionary soldier of '76, and the services which he has since rendered to the state of Kentucky, in the executive department of government, shew it to be of the most elevated kind. No person perhaps, possesses more solid information with respect to the real interests, political relations and situation of the country; and it would be equally ungenerous and absurd, to suppose that Col. SHELLEY would quit the delightful retreat of domestic life, which he enjoys in a high degree, for the burthenome duties of a public situation, from any other motive than a sincere desire to promote the welfare of his country.

You should rejoice, fellow citizens, at the discovery of a motive so highly honorable in itself, and which aims at your happiness as its object. Yield your suffrage, therefore, where it ought really to be devoted. Do not tamper with the sacred right of election, which you derive from the republican spirit of our constitution, by committing your interest into the hands of men, who may not deserve your patronage, to the disparagement of patriotism, talents and integrity. When you delegate to Congressmen of the first description, your representation is only a nominal one. When you send men possessed of the above qualifications, you comply with all those duties which are obligatory on you as freemen and republicans.

A CITIZEN.

NEW-YORK, April 9.

FOREIGN NEWS.

London papers to the 4th of March, (2 days later than our former accounts) were yesterday received at the office of the New-York Gazette, by the ship Washington, Capt. Liddle.

The chief information which they contain we shall give in a summary way, as want of room compels us to avoid entering into lengthy details.

A Frenchman, by name Bourgeois, just returned from England, with a number of his accomplices, has been arrested in France, charged with a conspiracy against the government, and to assassinate the Chief Consul. They were sent off from Rouen to Paris in irons, under a guard of 50 horsemen.

All the officers belonging to the staff of the English army in the West-Indies, have been ordered to repair to their respective quarters with all possible dispatch.

A private letter from Paris mentions, "that all officers of the French army on leave of absence, and all those of that nation in the pay of Spain, have received directions, the former to join their respective regiments immediately, and the latter to return to France, for the purpose of serving in their native land."

Five thousand troops in the French service had arrived at Genoa, to embark for St. Domingo. 10,000 more were daily expected for the same service. Great discontent prevailed in the first detachment, and numbers deserted.

Upwards of 100 dwellings, with out-houses and the Parish church, were destroyed by fire, at Warstein, in Westphalia.

Letters from Dunkirk state, that the epidemic malady which prevails there, is supposed to be the yellow fever, imported from St. Domingo. Three fourths of the town are ill of the disease. Fourteen or fifteen die of it daily.

Accounts from Vienna of the 28th January, say, that General Brune is specially instructed to demand information from the Divan respecting the intentions of the Porte with regard to England and the English garrison in Alexandria. They add that Russia will interfere as a mediatress in the settlement of this interesting affair.

A letter from Bordeaux, to a gentleman in Norfolk, after mentioning the appointment of General Bernadotte, as Minister to the United States, adds— "It is said that such is the state of the French Colonies, that new commercial arrangements with the United States, are necessary, and that the American commerce is shortly to be put on a better footing."

Extract of a letter received by brig Tace from Bordeaux.

"Bordeaux, Feb. 24, 1803. "Our correspondent at Paris writes that a report prevails that the order is countermanded for the embarkment of troops for New-Orleans. He promises to ascertain the truth and inform us without loss of time. The affair is altogether mysterious; we have been in expectation of the expedition being made three months ago—letters have been received from Paris two months ago announcing the squadron would sail in a few days, and yet they are still in port."

UNFORTUNATE AEROSTATION.

C. Olivari left Paris on the 11th of November to repair to Orleans, with an intention of making an aerostatic experiment, according to the process of Montgolfier. He attempted two different days to inflate his balloon but without success; at length, to gratify the impatience of the public, who had twice repaired in great crowds to the place where the experiment was to be performed, he determined on the 25th to make a third trial, after taking the necessary measures to cause his machine to ascend.

At half after twelve the balloon was inflated, and retained only by some cords. C. Olivari, desirous to realize the promise he had made in hand-bills to ascend in his machine, fixed to the extremity of it an oval basket, covered with paper, and into it various combustibles and spiritous liquors to maintain the fire in the chafing dish, which was fixed between this frail basket and the balloon. He then entered the basket, after having formally assured the members of the administration who were present, that there would be no danger; he then caused the cords to be loosened. The balloon rose with such rapidity that he disappeared in three minutes from the spectators; the weather indeed was cloudy, and the horizon was covered with a thick fog.

At one o'clock the mayor of the commune of Fleury, distant about a league from the place where the balloon ascended, was informed by a farmer, that a man had fallen from the clouds in the neighborhood of the place where he had been at work. The mayor, after ascertaining the truth of this fact, immediately sent notice to the prefect of the department, and the latter informed the mayor of Orleans, who went to the spot where he saw that the body found was that of citizen Olivari, who had set out from Orleans in his balloon, half an hour before his fall.

On searching in the environs of the body several fragments of the basket were found; and it evidently appeared that the only support of this unfortunate aeronaut had been consumed by fire. It is supposed that some spark from the chafing dish had fallen on the too combustible matter with which C. Olivari was surrounded, and rendered him the victim of his imprudence, and perhaps also of unskillfulness. The balloon, disengaged from its ballast, continued its rout, and it is not known where it fell.

The unfortunate Olivari, who perished so miserably near Orleans in France, was an Italian, and very well known in Paris immediately before the rebellion. From the Clef du Cabinet we learn that he was in Paris a zealous defender of the superiority of fire balloons over those filled with gas, that he had published a pamphlet in support of his doctrine, and actually challenged Garnerin to an aerial race between a fire and gas balloon, which Garnerin thought proper to decline. The balloon from which the wretched man fell, is described as having been composed of paper only, slightly secured by pack-thread, and a thin netting—materials so frail and so inflammable, that Garnerin applied to the magistrates of Orleans to forbid the ascent, but without effect.

TO THE PRINTER.

PERMIT a giddy, trifling Girl,
For once to fill your poet's corner;
She cares not how the critics frown,
Or beaux and macaronies scorn her.

She longs in print her lines to see:
Oblige her, (sure you can't refuse it)
And if you find her out, your fee
Shall be—to kiss her—if you choose it.

Perhaps you think the fee too small,
You would not think so if you knew
her;
For She has charms, confels'd by all
Who have the happiness to view her.

The favor that to you she proffers,
Has been solicited in vain,
And many flattering, splendid offers
Rejected with a cold disdain.

She scorns the man, however pretty,
However riches round him flow,
However wife, or great, or witty,
That's to his country's rights a foe.

He that to flatter folks in power,
His country's freedom would betray,
Deserves the gallows every hour,
Or worse—to feel a tyrant's sway—

May such, alone be unprotected
By justice and by virtue's laws;
And to despotic powers subjected,
Suffer the miseries they cause.

To scorn them is each female's duty;
Let them no children have or wife;
May they ne'er meet the smiles of beauty,
Nor any social joys of life.

The Author is preparing materials for a second volume, which will probably be published in the beginning of the next year.

WILLIAM WEST.

MONTEZUMA,
A Fine Large
JACK ASS,

WILL stand at my farm, one and a half miles from Lexington, and will be let to mares at 10 dollars the season, payable in Cash or Hemp, delivered in Lexington—Or any person or persons putting five mares by the season may discharge the same by one mule colt, (in good order, coming from a mare 15 hands high) delivered at five or six months old.

The season to commence the 20th April, and end the 20th October.

MONTEZUMA is about three and a half years old, near or quite 13 bands high, and is of the large breed in Mexico. He was travelled when two years old 1000 miles to Natchez, and from thence to this state, which no doubt has been prejudicial to his growth.

Mules are produced in Mexico to 14 1-2 hands in height, from this strain or breed of Jacks, and small mares, running at large in the woods without grain. They will sell in the Southern states for more money than large draught horses, and when shipped to the West Indies, are sold at double that value. They can be raised as cheap as a steer, and travelled to South Carolina, or Georgia, for one dollar expence for twenty that a horse can. There is much less danger from distempers. Kentucky has no competition in mule raising but from the New-England states; and there they are not raised to any size, the climate being too cold, and all authors assert, that the als flourishes best in moderate climates. The rage for breeding horses here, will reduce the price of any market, which can't be done in mules for a century, as the West India market has never yet been fully supplied.

ROBERT BARR.
April 15th, 1803.

* * * A fabulous report prevails that mares will not breed from the horse, after mules—authors contradict the report—and any person may see a mare on my farm now with foal of her eighth colt, after having bred a mule.
